One of the exercises is described as follows:the heads and ring, was attended by the Board of Examiners and many other spectators. This exercise takes place in a large hall in the basement of the academic building. This hall is a very dark, dismallooking place, with a row of columns only a few feet apart through the centre, extending its entire length, to 114c. as extremes. and is utterly unfit for the purpose for which it is

Twenty-eight horses, properly equipped, are led into the hall. Lieutenant Sacket, the instructor in this department, sits near one end of the room, mounted on a splendid white charger. Twenty-eight cadets, members of the graduating class, march in, and and the high ones must be filled by men of mark, at the command of the instructor, all are instantly mounted. Posts are placed along the sides of the hall, and on the top of them are put balls of stuffed canvas about a foot in diameter, called "heads." On the arms of some other posts much higher, rings are or impelled by selfish motives-for to the most wor- hung. The cadets ride around and cut in various ways, at these heads and rings, with their horses on a full gallop. The lieutenant sets the example. Not a stroke of his well-aimed sabre misses; but lo! as he completes the round, in consequence of the curbehain of his bridle breaking, his horse plunges fortheir rank, and be associated in those enterprises ward against the board fence, directly in front of the ladies, and down he goes, flat upon his side, and his immensely heavy rider falls with him.
